Honours Seminar in Canadian Politics: Political Representation in Canada

What is the state of political representation in Canada? Are our political preferences well represented, by our electoral system, or by political parties, or by elected officials? How well do our political institutions enhance, rather than detract, from representation? How well do we fulfill our part of the bargain — do we have political preferences that are sufficiently well-informed, and worth representing? This course is intended to address these issues, among others, focusing on a combination of classic and more recent work on Canadian politics.

Grades are based on the following:

Seminar Presentation (15%): Students will be assigned to present weekly readings in pairs. A pair will make a presentation of no more than 15 minutes. They will also present some key questions to guide the group discussion. The use of Powerpoint slides is allowed, indeed, encouraged. The presenting pair will also provide a one-page handout for the class, at the beginning of the class, indicating the main points of the presentation.

Seminar Discussant (10%): Each student will also be a seminar discussant at least twice during the term. The role of a discussant is to speak immediately following the presentation - to make comments or criticisms of what has come before. A discussant should come with a few points ready to go. They need not take very much time, but should anticipate five minutes or so of comments after the presentation has finished.

Seminar Participation (10%): This grade is for participation in seminar when you are neither presenter nor discussant. All students are expected to do the reading, and to be ready to discuss them.

Short Papers (2, at 15% each): Each student will submit two short papers that critically evaluate a week's readings. These will be no more than 5 pages long; they will be due before the beginning of the class in which the readings are to be discussed. No late papers will be accepted, at all, without a doctor's note. They can be submitted through WebCT only.

Term Paper (35%): The term paper is due on December 15th, again submitted digitally through WebCT only. Papers will be roughly 20 pages long, focusing on any topic of interest to the student, so long as they deal in some way with political representation in Canada. No late papers will be accepted without a doctor's note. The complete assignment will be handed out and discussed in detail in Week 3 of the course.

All course readings are available electronically through WebCT, and are listed in the Course Schedule that follows. Eleven weeks of readings are scheduled in advance – the others over the term are either guest seminars, or seminars on topics selected by the class.
